Brabender and Mühlenchemie agree on cooperation

Press Release, Ahrensburg, Duisburg, March 23, 2009: Mühlenchemie and Brabender work together in the application technology of the milling- and baking-industries – Bundled know-how leads to fast problem solving and to offer millers and bakers a knowledge fund.

The German flour specialist Mühlenchemie GmbH & Co. KG, Ahrensburg (ICC Corporate Member since 2002), and the manufacturer of laboratory instruments Brabender GmbH & Co. KG, Duisburg (ICC Corporate Member since 1993) agreed on cooperation by offering joint customer assistance concerning dough rheological problems in Germany, Russia, Mexico, China, and India. Romer Labs reacts to global acetonitrile shortage

Press Release, Tulln, Austria: Romer Labs (ICC Corporate Member since 2006) with its three Research Centers based in Austria, USA, and Singapore has reacted to the current acetonitrile shortage and has released alternative HPLC methods for the analysis of mycotoxins with their clean-up products that are based on methanol instead of acetonitrile. These alternative methods are all fully validated and are equivalent to the acetonitrile based standard methods. These new methanol-based methods completely avoid acetonitrile or use extremely low amounts of acetonitrile. Recently, independent events accentuated a global acetonitrile shortage, like the shut-down of production in China due to the Olympics, the damage to a acetonitrile plant in Texas due to Hurricane Ike, and finally, due to the severe economic slowdown that reduced the need for acrylic fibers (Acetonitrile is a byproduct of that process). MoniQA News

New Zealand: 9th MoniQA FST in Christchurch, New Zealand - Report

ESR, one of MoniQA's core partners in New Zealand, hosted the 9th MoniQA FST (Food Scientist Training) entitled "Modern methods for monitoring food quality and safety", 23 - 28 March 2009, in Christchurch, New Zealand.

Fifteen delegates from China, New Zealand, Vietnam and the UK participated in the workshop including topics such as "International Accreditation NZ (IANZ) – QA compliance and inter-laboratory comparisons" and "Melamine: from scandal to analysis – a tale of two molecules". There was also a laboratory demonstration of the melamine extraction protocol used at ESR as well as a technical seminar explaining the "Principles of PCR analysis in foods". The workshop was complemented with lectures on risk analysis, risk modelling, and risk communication.

MoniQA Alerts

MoniQA's Working Group on Emerging Food Safety Issues in collaboration with MoniQA's Dissemination Programme keep posting news alert and fact sheets on MoniQA's website at www.moniqa.org. The latest updates are:

Maximum limits for 4-Methylbenzophenone or Benzophenone

The European Commission sets maximum levels for food packaging printed with inks containing 4-Methylbenzophenone or Benzophenone. After the detection of 4-methylbenzophenone in a Belgian chocolate crunch muesli product the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) was tasked by the European Commission to undertake a risk assessment. 4-methylbenzophenone is used in printing inks and appears to have migrated into the cereal from external cardboard packaging. More at <http://www.moniqa.org/news>.

Canada may add acrylamide to its toxic substance list

Health Canada has recommended that acrylamide is included in the nation's list of toxic substances.

Acrylamide is a chemical produced when starchy foods, like potatoes, are cooked at high temperatures to produce products such as chips (French fries) or crisps (potato chips). Acrylamide is a suspected carcinogen and though the mode of action of induction of tumours is not fully understood, the recommendation has been made by Health Canada because current consumption levels may constitute a danger to human life or health. More at <http://www.moniqa.org/news>.

Melamine crisis not over yet

The Indonesian Food and Drug Monitoring Agency (BPOM) has confirmed fears that certain Chinese-based foods sold in Indonesia contain the toxic ingredient melamine, citing six registered and six illegal products in circulation in the country. For more information please visit <http://www.moniqa.org/melamine>.

EC to increase nitrate limits in spinach, lettuce and rocket

European Commission proposals for permanent increases to the existing limits for spinach and lettuce laid down in Commission Regulation 1881/2006 emerged at the end of last year, as temporary derogations permitting the UK and some other Northern European countries to exceed these maximum limits (for consumption on their own respective territories) came to an end. The increased limits for nitrate levels are unlikely to come into force until later in 2009, however. More information at <http://www.moniqa.org/news>.

Hormones in Bottled Water?

A recent study by Wagner and Oehlmann (2009) has analysed commercially available mineral water and detected estrogenic contamination in 60 percent of all samples. Estrogens function as the primary female sex hormones. The authors conclude that consumption of mineral water may therefore contribute to the overall exposure of humans to endocrine disruptors (substances that interfere with the endocrine system). It is probable that this estrogenic contamination originates from plastic food packaging materials because water bottled in glass was less affected. More information at <http://www.moniqa.org/news>.
